Original Poetry. [For the Palladium.]

TO HER ABRENT DAUGHTER. BY MRS. A. D. HEMENWAY. A swited exchanting dream all bright, Eastenling o'er me now, Of those lay'd days, o'er sorrow's lines,

Were trac'd upon my brow. That fills a mother's breast, To see her loyed and characted ones,

Leave the paternal nest. Sill of't those levely years, that's fled Upon Line's rolling stream, Beam back upon my soul again, Like some eiyeran dream.

Lydia, I'm thinking o'er to night, Those sumy days that's past, When thou, was sitting here with me, Sweet days, to sweet to last.

To me, how very and it seems, To lowe thy presence here, And smiles that play'd upon thy lips, I lov'd so well to share.

I miss thy merry gushing voice, That was so light and free, It of't beguif'd my weary hours, To hear thy living glee.

Thine eyes of light and love, that of't Their beams have on me thrown, May still their smiling glances throw, Yet not to meet my own.

My love for thee is still the same, Thou art to me as dear, As when, I kiss'd thy roseate cheek, And brush'd away the tear.

In all thy after years, my child, May bliss that he'er alloys, With sweetest flowers thy pathway deck, Unblighted be thy joys,

Think not my child, substiantial bliss, Can e'er be found below, From God's unaying fount of love, It's living streams o flow. Ludiow, Vt., February, 1855.
